NCC needs to improve its recycling capabilities and they should go ahead with this site on the other side of the road to the existing one- future proofing the centre is key and it will be silly to expand the centre on its current site (with little growth potential and will involve cutting down lots of trees) if it will mean in another 5 years we have to go through this planning again for another proposed expansion as they run out of space (essentially being boxed in). The field in the proposed site is big enough and I don't believe that it will increase traffic to the area, either- if anything offers more parking. As a local resident I don't mind that the site is visible either, we should showcase our effort for the planet rather than hide it away. The overall positive environmental impact of this project in increasing our recycling capabilities outweighs the negative of building on a greenfield site.
